TRICKLE UP PARTNERS WITH NEWTON RUNNING TO HELP THE EXTREME POOR TAKE THE FIRST STEPS OUT OF POVERTY

Shoe Company to Donate $1 of Every Pair Sold to Fight Global Poverty

May 12, 2009 (New York, NY) – Trickle Up, an international poverty alleviation organization that empowers people living on less than $1 a day to take the first steps out of poverty, announced its new partnership with Newton Running, the revolutionary Boulder, Colorado-based running shoe company will make significant donations in 2009 to fight both global poverty and prostate cancer. Newton will donate $1 from the sale of each shoe to Trickle Up and one percent of its gross profits to Athletes for a Cure, a program of the Prostate Cancer Foundation.

“Trickle Up is thrilled to be partnering with Newton Running,” said William M. Abrams, president of Trickle Up. “We share with them a commitment to enterprising, innovative solutions. With one-fifth of the world’s people living on less than $1 a day, we are excited that Newton Running will be working with us to better the lives of the very poorest.”

Trickle Up works in eight countries around the world to help the very poorest lift themselves out of poverty through microenterprise. Newton will also partner with Athletes for a Cure, a program of the Prostate Cancer Foundation designed to assist individual athletes in their quest to raise money for better treatments and a cure for prostate cancer.

“When we started this company, we made a commitment to give back and support those who are less fortunate,” states Newton Running co-founder Jerry Lee. “I’ve fought through prostate cancer personally and we’re proud to lend our support to a cause which is dedicated to fighting a disease that will affect one in six American men. Likewise, Newton was founded with an entrepreneurial spirit and we’re excited to support Trickle Up, an organization that is fighting poverty by helping individuals start microenterprises.”
